BLIND ORGANIST

First Congregational Church Recital Intended as Tribtue to Dr. Bischoff.

An organ recital in the nature of a wibute to the late Dr. John W. Bischoff, the blind musician who for thirty-four years was organist of the First Congregational Church, will be given at that church this evening as part of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of that congrega william Stansfield, bachelor of music, fellow of the Royal College of Organists, and now organist for the church, will play five numbers, and members of the choir will sing several of Dr. Bischoff's compositions. In addition, there will be a culogy of Dr. Bischoff by the Rev® Dr. Stephen M. Newman, who during the twenty-one years of his pastorate at the First Congregational Church, beginning in 1885, was intimately associated with the organist.

musical development of Washington and for that reason the committee in charge arranged this evening's program, as a part of the anniversary celebration which began last Tuesday evening, and will conclude tomorrow evening.

The women of the church will hold a special meeting this afternoon at 3:20 o'clock at which the work the women's organisations have done in the half century of the church's history will be reviewed. Mrs. Julia T. Bodfah will preside and "The Vision." a pageant, will be presented under the direction of Miss Eisie Hand, of Philadelphia, by seventy-flve young women.

Greet Old Pastors .

The older members of the church sathered in force last night to greet sathered in force last night to greet the three surviving pastors of the five it has had in La fifty years of existence. The cidest was Dr. Newman, now president of Howard University. The others were the Rev. Dr. Samuel H. Woodrow, pastor from 197 to 1913, and now in charge of the Pilgrim Congregational Church of St. Louis, and the Rev. Dr. Jay T. Stocking, pastor during 1914 and part of 1915, and now with the Christian Union Congregational Church of Upper Montelair, N. J. The church has no pastor at present, the work there being in charge of the Rev. Robert W. Coe, assistant pastor. No less interesting than the greetings of the former pastors was a lecture by the former pastors was a lecture by rederick L. Fishback on "Washington ity Fifty Years Ago," illustrated with frederick L. Fishback on "Washington City Fifty Years Ago," illustrated with stereopticon slides. Views of the pub-lic bulldings and famous private resi-dences as they appeared at the close of the civil war created much interest.

IS STRONG IN ATHLETICS

Attempts to Foster Clean Amateur Sport Among Young Men of City.

Twenty-five years ago, this fail, a young man who had come to Washington with a little capital found himself with one silver dollar and a youthful ambition as his sole assets.

That man was Frank W. Bolgiano, now a leading business man of Washington, also widely known as the teacher of the Bolgiano class of the Foundry M. E. Church. The incident of twentyfive years ago figures in this story be-cause it was the struggle that ensued before he had re-established himself, and began to build up his present business, that gave Mr. Holgiano a keen ness, that gave Mr. Holgiano a keen sympathy for the young man making his way in a city. The Bolgiano class is his expression of that sympathy. "I wanted to help the young men who come here," he said. "For I knew that, without friends, there are a lot of discouragements awaiting them. I had learned that the associations and friendships found in a church are the most helpful sort. So, about ten years ago, with three young men, I started a class at Foundry. Now our membership is more than 125."

His Other Experience. Before that Mr. Bolgiano had had plenty of experience in Sunday schools He had been associated with Hamlin for a number of years, and later went to St. Paul's, at Fifteenth and R streets. which was amagamated with Foundry when that church moved from its his-toric home at Fourteenth and G to its present building on Sixteenth and when that church moved from its historic home at Fourteenth and G to its present building on Sixteenth and Church streets.

Mr. Bolgiano did not have the idea that dropping around to hear a Sunday school lesson for an hour or so would prove of unbounded service to young men. That is only one feature of the Bolgiano class work. It is best known because it first launched the Sunday school baseball movement in this city, and mapped out much other work, such as evening lectures, entertainments and lectures, which have pointed the way to other successful organized Bunday school classes.

As a boy Mr. Bolgiano attended a Sunday school at Waverly, Baltimore county, a town which since has become a part of Baltimore city. There he was assistant superintendent. He joined the Hamilne school immediately upon coming to Washington. He was a worker there, and later at St. Paul's. When he took, up the work of organizing his class he became interested in the possibility of athletics as a phase of Sunday school work. He was president of the amateur athletic body, formed of fourteen Sunday schools, which later was converted into the Sunday School League, Baseball fans have said that this association, and later the league, has done much to foster clean sport in amateur athletics here.

"Our class now is a part of a Sunday school of 550 members," said Mr. Bol-"Our class now is a part of a Sunday and the assis school of $50 members," said Mr. Bol- Louis Mattern.

giano. "I believe we have the finest equipment, in building and fixtures, of any Sunday school plant in the country, and I have visited those of many cities. The school is equipped with a pipe organ in the main assembly room. Around it are a score or more compartments where classes meet. Beside these we have nineteen rooms used for organized classes and the various departments, primary, junior, intermediate, and adult. The Holgiano class gets out a year abook which includes a calendar of the lecture, reception and banquet program for the year, as well as a directory of members. Out of this class came the Rev. Merritt Earl, who was pastor at the Congress Heights M. E. Church and is now assigned to the Falls thurch, Va., congregation.
